This is the story of me and my friend. I once met this real kind girl, she loved Technology and any kind of things that had even the most simple connection with artificial intelligence. As you can tell I wasn't the most interested in those kind of things, but she was, and so I didn't tell her that I didn't like anything like that, but then after quite some time things started going south. She started doing really weird things and she wouldn't leave the computer all day long, I didn't know what to tell her, she would think I was a prick if I told her that she was going mental.

Time passed by and she would get even more crazy about this. She started getting some reactions, then she started going to the doctor, but everything seemed normal, she was healthy and everything the doctor could check was fine, and so she kept doing everything she'd done before just like normal, right?

One day as I walked into her room, I saw something that horrified me. I just couldn't help noticing that she had wires all over her and a headset on, but right there I found it, I found out, it looked kind of like a syringe and she was talking, but talking weirdly like she was maybe GLITCHED or something like that. She had been injecting this weird substance and it seemed like she was doing it on command, but who would do that to her?

A couple of weeks later she died. I might know who did it, but if I tell someone this, I will be the next.
